NEW DISCOVERY. COMPOUND OXYGEN TREATMENT. HOW CONSUMPTION MAY BE CURED.

Properly considered, respiration is in reality the comple-ion of digestion.

The stomach may convert the food into chyme, the small nestines may convert the chyme into chyic, and the absort-mis may take up the latter and duly convey it late the circu-stillar review. In the latter and duly convey it late the circuintentines may convert the chyme into chyle, and the absorbants may take in the latter and dily convey it late the book-onts may take in the latter and dily convey it late the observations may take in the latter and dily convey it late the observations of the langs, it will not make good blood or at food due in trightment to the body. Notice the rapid declins which follows pulmonary consumption and other discasses affecting the arreture and interrupting the functions of the lungs. Recovery is always to be feared unless along with the disappearance of the prominent symptoms restoration of the loss lesh occurs. The result of bealthy respiration, if respiration remains impared, however great the relef may be in other respects, there is reason to believe that the lungs are still so extensively diseased as to injure their functions, and that on the application of any fresh exciting cause the domain mischief will resume its activity. Hence the importance of breathing pure air, and that essential part Oaygen, which is the natural and physiological blood purifier. The Compound Oxygen which he removed in curing sany thousand cases of consumption, is similar in commosition and effect to the oxygen of the atmosohere. It is breathed directly into the lungs by the ordinary act of breathing, and through them is carried into the blood. Thus, as sodu as the blood will carry it, it reaches every part of the system, however remote, decomposing the impure matter in the blood and expelling it through the pores of the skin and other channels of the body, throat, lungs. Charrh, scrottia and all diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood, yield with great rapidity to this vitalizing agent.

Dr. BROWN is a result of the proper of the service of the construction of the continuous of the service of the continuous of the continuous of the condition of medicine, surgery.
